Pediatric Endocrinology and Diabetes
Twelfth Annual Symposium

Monday, November 11, 2013
8:15 am to 12:30 pm

Icahn School of Medicine at Mount Sinai
Goldwurm Auditorium (1st Floor)
1425 Madison Avenue at 98th Street
New York, NY

PROGRAM DESCRIPTION
This symposium is specifically designed to give a state of the art update on selected topics in pediatric endocrinology. Topics to be covered include growth hormone treatment in non-classically growth hormone deficient children, an update on the treatment of pediatric obesity and prevention and treatment strategies in type 1 and type 2 diabetes mellitus. Participants will learn about pathophysiology, treatment goals and treatment methods for diabetes and growth and will emerge more confident dealing with diabetes and endocrine challenges.

TARGET AUDIENCE
Pediatricians, family practitioners, scientists, nurse practitioners, physician assistants, diabetes educators, nutritionists, dieticians, social workers, residents, students and others involved in the care of young people with diabetes, growth disorders and other endocrine disorders.

GOALS AND OBJECTIVES
At the conclusion of the conference, the participants will be able to:
• Identify potential risks for diabetes and be better prepared to counsel parents and patients regarding prevention and treatment of obesity.
• Assess the etiology of growth disorders and have an understanding of the indications for growth hormone treatment.
• Recognize that there is an increase incidence of type 1 and type 2 diabetes and assess potential underlying factors related to the development of diabetes.
• Explain to patients and other healthcare providers the most recent advances in technology for the treatment of type 1 and type 2 diabetes mellitus.
